1. A covert but official Russian office in Kaliningrad (Koenigsberg) is engaged in the production of German paper money currently in circulation. It prints mainly fifty and one hundred mark notes.
2. The paper is delivered to the printing plant in Russian trucks. The plates are said to come already engraved and processed from somewhere in the Soviet Union. The finished banknotes are shipped to the Russian Zone of Germany. Employed at this Kaliningrad plant are a number of German specialists from the printing trades. They are held to secrecy by threats of very severe punishment should they reveal the nature of their work.
